

3. The extent to which many of the women's concerns are in fact family issues should be emphasised. Their efforts to develop more effective strategies to cope with their experiences should be supported. This will result in increased benefit to them and their children. The women should not be expected to respond alone to the implications for intervention from the assessment. In this regard it is important also that the men are not alienated by falling into the trap of "beating" them with the assessment results.
4. The process of the Focus Group Discussion, the questionnaire survey, and the feedback of the survey results has enhanced the development of the women's groups and activities. This momentum should be used to initiate more self-help groups and further promote women's participation in the camp decision making.
5. The networks of women that were established during the focus group discussions should be maintained and supported as sources of assistance and information. They have provided much needed medium through which the women have been able to express their concerns in a constructive manner.
6. The women's anxieties about repatriation should and can be addressed by providing them with information from sources that they trust. The women themselves with the assistance of agencies working in the camps are best placed to determine these "reliable" sources, and to ensure that the information is widely disseminated and available for discussion. ■

CALL FOR PAPERS ON
Integration of Refugees—Canadian Experience

The Centre for Refugee Studies will publish a special issue of Refuge on 'Integration of Refugees—Canadian Experience'. The issue will deal with the following topics:

- Integration of refugee women and children in Canadian society
- The definition of integration, integration and multiculturalism, and conceptual models and frameworks which explain the refugee integration process
- Impact of Canada's immigration/resettlement policy on refugee integration
- Psychosocial issues related to refugee integration
- Role of governmental and non-governmental agencies in refugee resettlement and integration
- Effect of Canadian regionalism on refugee resettlement

Papers are now being invited on these issues and other related areas for consideration. Please send a short abstract to the guest editor by November 30, 1993. Deadline for article submission is December 15, 1993.

The paper length may not exceed 15 pages (double-spaced) or about 4000 words. Submissions may be sent on disc or by E-mail.
